The BMA is seeking a Manager of Interpretation and Evaluation to assist in the development, implementation, and evaluation of interpretive media, technologies, and programs.

The Manager of Interpretation and Evaluation will create dynamic educational content that will offer visitors meaningful encounters with the BMA’s collection and artistic program; opportunities for creative exploration and expression; and an understanding of ideas and human experiences. The Manager of Interpretation and Evaluation is a hybrid position, suited to a candidate with a broad skill set and background including but not limited to museum education, visitor research and evaluation, UX, graphic design, web design, and mobile technologies.

The successful candidate will collaborate with colleagues within the education division, across the Museum, and within the Baltimore community. They will work with curators, conservators, librarians, archivists, and educators to identify and create content, in both analog and digital media; marketing, designers, visitor services, and advancement colleagues to integrate interpretive technologies into other digital strategies (website, social media, way-finding tools) and to raise awareness for new educational initiatives both on-site and online; IT and collection management staff to build out IT infrastructure as required, catalogue, manage, and store new digital assets. They will identify, hire, and manage outside consultants and/or contractors including outside vendors, evaluation firms, videographers, transcribers, media specialists, and editors to support interpretive projects.

This is a full-time, exempt position reporting to the Director of Interpretation.

RESPONSIBILITIES
This position will serve as project manager for a variety of interpretive initiatives, with a dual focus on digital and analog content production and management, executed in collaboration with both Museum staff and outside vendors. The Manager of Interpretation and Evaluation will also be responsible for reviewing exhibition texts to ensure BMA standards and desired visitor outcomes are being met. The Manager of Interpretation and Evaluation will serve as a project lead in visitor research and evaluation efforts within the Education and Interpretation division and serve as a collaborator in similar cross-division work.

Additional responsibilities include but are not limited to:

- Conduct feasibility research on current and next-generation interpretive strategies, environments, and technologies.
- Provide support to the Director of Interpretation in developing and implementing interpretive initiatives in a broad range of media.
- Support video production work within Interpretation and collaborate with virtual programmers and digital media experts across the Division and Museum to strengthen production values and share research and development.
- Liaise with curatorial, marketing, installation, and other colleagues throughout the Museum, and with stakeholders in the Baltimore community.
- Specify materials and work closely with outside vendors, consultants, and contractors to ensure competitive pricing, products, and services.
- Develop and administer work schedules, timelines, and other resources to ensure that projects meet milestones and desired outcomes.
- Maintain accuracy of Interpretation work in the BMA’s project management software, with attention to ensuring a consistent workflow for Manager of Interpretation and Evaluation and Director of Interpretation and well-coordinated project deadlines.
- Prepare and manage interpretation budgets and coordinate program contracts, statistics, proposals, and documentation.
- Organize testing and evaluation activities, working with outside consultants as necessary, as well as evaluation interns. Provide support for training evaluation team and deploying evaluations.
- Support accessibility in all interpretive projects, working with colleagues across the Museum to prototype, create, test, and implement standards and products that improve visitor access at the Museum.
